Wykłady

Kod	Opis	D (30)	Z (18)
W1	Introduction: The evolution of British political institutions. Introduces some of the themes that the course will explore. It will discuss the nature of British politics and society, and the way different political institutions have evolved over time.	2	2
W10	Local government in Britain: The lecture will consider the structure of local government in Britain, and the reforms that have been introduced in recent years (including the creation of a directly elected London Mayor). It will assess how much power local councils have in Britain today, and the relationship between local and national politics.	2	1

W11	The Media in British Politics: The role of the media in British politics (especially the tabloid press) has led to a great deal of debate in recent years. The class will discuss how influential British newspapers are when it comes influencing the attitudes of the British public; and how politicians are responding to the demands of a 'rolling' 24-hour news culture.	2	1
W12	Britain and Europe: The history of Britain's attitude towards European integration will be considered. The class will emphasize that while successive British governments have been supporters of economic integration, they have been resistant to the establishment of supranational political institutions, and have opted out of several European programmes, notably the single currency.	2	1
W13	British Foreign and Defence Policy: The class will examine recent developments in British foreign and defence policy. It will be emphasized that Britain is an important European power, but that it also has wider international interests, and that it plays an important role in several important international institutions, such as in the United Nations and NATO.	2	1
W14	Devolution in Scotland and Wales: The lecture will examine the nature of the devolved institutions in Scotland and Wales, and some of the most pressing issues in those parts of the UK. Reasons for the recent strength of Scottish nationalism, and the potential for Scotland to leave the United Kingdom, will also be considered.	2	1
W15	Northern Ireland and the Peace Process: The lecture will examine the devolved institutions within Northern Ireland, the political parties, and the history of the peace process. Differences between the politics in Northern Ireland and the rest of Britain will be emphasized.	2	1
W2	The Constitution and the Monarchy: The class will consider the nature of the British constitution. The role of the Crown in the modern constitution will be considered; and how the uncoded (unwritten) constitution functions will also be examined.	2	2
W3	The Prime Minister and the Cabinet: The extent of the powers of the Prime Minister and the rest of the Cabinet are examined. The extent to which Britain has become a 'presidential' system will also be considered.	2	2
W4	The Government and the Civil Service: The class will consider the functions of the more junior levels of government and the role of the civil service in implementing the government's policies.	2	1
W5	Parliament: The role of Parliament in the British political system will be analysed. In particular, the extent of Parliament's relative weakness in relation to the executive will be discussed.	2	1
W6	Elections and political participation in Britain: The class will consider the ways in which people participate in politics in Britain, and some of the explanations that have been given for the general decline in British political participation. The class will also discuss the various voting systems that are used in different British elections (general, European, regional, local), and the consequences of these systems.	2	1
W7	Political Parties in Britain: The lecture will consider the general role that parties play in political systems, and consider how the party system has functioned in Britain historically. The class will examine the nature of the two-party system in Britain, and the extent to which the duopoly has begun to weaken in recent years.	2	1
W8	The Conservative Party and the Liberal Democrats: Both the Conservatives and the Liberal Democrats can trace their historical roots back to the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. The two parties' ideological principles will be considered, as well as the history of their governments. The performance of the current Conservative-Liberal Democrat coalition government will also be considered.	2	1

W9	The Labour Party and the other smaller parties: The class will examine the history of the Labour Party, and its ideological principles. It will also discuss the role that Tony Blair played in modernizing the Labour Party in the 1990s, and the performance of the Labour government from 1997-2010.
